Co. Printing Distribution Plan Studied

Steps for Benefit of Home Shops Are Taken

Steps to keep San Mateo county's printing "at home" in peninsula shops were taken by the board of San Mateo County Supervisors Tuesday upon the filing of a report showing that more than twice as much money is spent with San Francisco firms as inside the county.

The figures presented by Supervisor Manuel Francis, Half Moon Bay, showed that in four and one-half years the sum of $102,267.28 was spent with San Francisco firms, while only $48,252 25 came to peninsula shops.

This was for printing of letterheads, envelopes, ballots, and the like.

Publishing of legals cost the county $57,312.12 during that period, and this fund was spent with the peninsula newspapers.

After hearing talks from Sam H. Winklebleck, publisher of The Tribune; Earl McCallum, publisher of the San Mateo Times, and A. B. Cargill, publisher of the Burlingame Advance-Star, the board named a committee of two to study the system in use in Contra Costa county for the letting of printing and publishing.

McCallum, who came here recently from Contra Costa, said that the work is let out to shops on a basis of investment, payroll and circulation.

Under the plan being worked out by the publishers, every print shop and newspaper in San Mateo county stands to be substantially benefited from the new business which will be kept at home and allows a more equitable distribution of that already enjoyed.

County Manager Walter Kellogg and Purchasing Agent Ernest Werder were named by the board to study the Contra Costa system and file a report with the board at an early meeting.

Manager Kellogg said he favored a division of the legal printing among the newspapers year by year, instead of biennially. Supervisor Albert Witt, Colma, moved that this be the policy of the board, but the motion was lost for want of a second.

The present legal newspaper is starting on the second year of its existing contract.

Way Prepared For Manager At Hospital

An economic survey designed to put the county-owned Community Hospital "in order" was authorized by the San Mateo County Board of Health at a meeting in San Mateo last night. Dr. Harper Peddicord, Redwood Ctiy, chairman of the board, presided.

Dr. Harold E. Morrison, county health director, gave an outline of the proposed survey. It proposes to pave the way for the appointment of a business manager for the institution next year.

Funds set out for the business manager this year and partly applied to hospital payroll will be used for the survey. A cost of $1000, which County Manager Walter Kellogg believes too high, has been estimated.

Dr. E. W. Cleary of San Mateo introduced the motion. No appointee to make the survey has yet been named.

Several grand juries have recommended the business manager, and the plan has the support of Dr. C. V. Thompson, chairman of the board of supervisors.

Temperance Union To Meet Monday

The county executive board of the San Francisco-San Mateo Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been called by Mrs. Beatrice E. Coggins, the president, to meet at the Glide Foundation, 322 Ellis street, Monday, January 8, at 1 o'clock.

Directors of the 28 departments of work carried on by the organization will report. Mrs. E. J. Clinton, director of evangelistic work, will lead the devotions. More plans for the work of 1934 will be formulated.

Sequoia Block Offices Taken For Schools

New offices of Miss Pansy Jewett Abbott, county superintendent of schools, will be located in the Sequoia Block on Broadway, County Manager Walter Kellogg announced today.

Miss Abbott will have three offices in the building, which is just opposite from the main entrance to the court house. This is convenient to the offices of County Auditor Edward Stack, with which Miss Abbott makes frequent contact during the day.

The old offices will be utilized for the county law library, which require larger quarters than the former public reception room of District Attorney Edmund Scott's office.

The law library trustees this week asked the supervisors to provide them with Miss Abbott's offices. The matter was referred to Manager Kellogg for a solution with today's result.

'Saving' on Co. School Taxes Is $36 on $3000

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 30.—The property owning taxpayer of San Mateo county, owning property assessed at $3,000, had a reduction estimated at $36.60 on his county tax bill this year, because of the shift of school costs from the counties to the state, according to a study recently completed by California Taxpayers' Association.

The county schools will receive $541,320 from this state this year, in place of the $613,321 levied last year by the county, according to L. D. Gifford, director of research of the association. The amount which will be received from the state this year is the minimum county requirement under the former law, which, in addition, required that the county allow for a 10 per cent delinquency in collections. If it had not been for changes in the method of financing schools, the county would have had to levy this $541,320 for general county school support. On present valuations, the allowing for delinquencies, this would have required a rate of $1.22 per $100 of assessed valuation, in addition to the present levy.

This estimated reduction in local tax levies has been widely heralded as a "saving," which, strictly speaking, it is not, Mr. Gifford pointed out. The transfer of $40,000,000 annual school costs to the state does not mean an actual saving to the owners of common property, for they, along with their non-property owning neighbors, will pay from $45,000,000 to $50,000,000 to the state through the 2½ per cent sales tax.

Shift Control Of Highway to State Bodies

City, at Same Time, Acts to Protect Its Rights

Following weeks of deliberation, the city council Monday night adopted a resolution relinquishing its control of El Camino Real to the state board of public works and highway commission.

This is in line with what other cities are doing, and is in response to the request of the state, which provided a resolution for the purpose.

However, the local authorities added some provisions of their own to the state's model resolution, which are designed to protect certain rights of the municipality.

The city reserves the right to maintain its automatic traffic signals, and its underground facilities along or beneath the highway.

The city also assumes no surface jurisdiction over the 24-foot center strip, which is under county control.

Several councilmen wondered if the resolution were necessary. City Attorney Mansfield said it was "a gesture" which would satisfy the state and probably result in no complications.

The resolution provides that the city will maintain any portion of the highway which may be abandoned by the state, but it is thought that the route of El Camino Real will not be changed locally.

The city attorney pointed out that the center strip needs repaving, and that, if the city takes jurisdiction, the state will be obliged to do this work.

Councilman H. A. Beeger said that "it seems to me we are giving away something for nothing," and declined to vote on the resolution. It was carried, on motion of Paul McCarthy, seconded by Robert N. Jones. Councilman Charles Hildebrant was absent.

At the request of Fire Chief Mark E. Ryan, the council authorized firemen to practice on the drill tower, which has recently been erected at the Central Fire Station. This authorization, it is believed, will help to strengthen the city's case against the insurance companies, in the event a fireman is injured during drill. The motion was made by Charles Lambert, and seconded by McCarthy.

City Manager Rolison reported that work had been started on the construction of a million-gallon reservoir in the Emerald Lake hills.

The collection of taxes has come approximately within the estimate of the city manager, it was announced.

Bld'g Gain Is Recorded By City Official

With the closing of the year's records at the city hall Saturday, City Building Inspector I. C. Drathman announced that the total of building permits for 1933 is $186,545.

This is a gain of $32,380 over 1932, when the total was $154,165.

Although this year's total was far below totals of recent years, it does reflect the upturn, Drathman believes. In 1931 the amount was $714,934, and in 1930 it was $869,727.

December's total was $7085.

Big League Player Jailed By Police

Roy Johnson, 29, identified as a Boston big league baseball player and his companion, Theodore Almquist, 23, San Francisco truck driver, were booked at the county jail Monday by state traffic police.

Johnson, who gave his address as 1049 Church street, San Francisco, was booked for resisting an officer. Almquist was held for reckless driving. Both had been drinking, Capt. Paul Perussina reported.

The attention of State Officer Frank Chevalier was attracted by Almquist's driving. The officer stopped the pair on El Camino Real at Lomita Park. Johnson, the officer reported, sought to resist Almquist's arrest.

Both were held under $250 cash bail.

Ban Placed on Bookmaking In Pool Halls

District Attorney in Warning of Grand Jury Action

Warning that bookmaking in pool halls in peninsula cities must cease or offending parties will be summoned before the grand jury was sounded today by District Attorney Edmund Scott.

Scott was called upon by Foreman Martin Poss and the grand jury to put an end to the practice.

He conferred wth Sheriff James J. McGrath, whose policy has been to give the police chiefs of the various cities the opportunity to "clean up" before he acted.

Scott said that as a result of a previous warning most of the cities had cooperated, but while results in some of the cities have been good, others have defied the warning.

Those police chiefs who fail to respond will be given no further warning, Scott said, but will be summoned before the grand jury to explain their attitude.

In certain cities, Scott said, it is understood that police chiefs have been restrained by certain council members from acting, and if this is true, Scott declared that these council members will be summoned before the jury to explain.

The slot machine menace in the county has been greatly lessened as a result of a drive ordered some weeks ago, Scott said.

Limit of Two Refuse Dumps Is Proposed

Seeking a limit of two major dumps in San Mateo county, one to serve the north end and the other the southern portion, the San Mateo County Board of Health at a meeting in the San Mateo City Hall last night, determined upon a conference with officials of the various peninsula cities.

County Manager Walter Kellogg and Dr. Harold E. Morrison, county health director, were authorized by motion of the board to summon the officials together at an early date.

Mayors and city managers of the peninsula cities will be invited, and the cooperation of the garbage collectors will be sought to assure success of the plan.

Present dumping methods in the county were considered detrimental to the public health.

Mrs. Elsa McGinn of San Mateo, member of the board of health, introduced the motion authorizing the conference.

Allotments to Rivers, Ports Are Approved

Redwood Port Plan Pointed Out By Army Board

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3 (AP)—The chief of the army engineers recommended to congress today that $993,800 be appropriated for the maintenance of rivers and harbors in California during the fiscal year of 1935 and $2,086,500 be authorized for new work there.

At the same time he revealed $4,790,000 of public works funds was being or soon would be expended in California river and harbor improvements.

A total appropriation of $25,000,000 was asked for maintenance during the fiscal year. No total was available for the recommended improvements throughout the nation but an item of $1,530,000 for new work on the Sacramento river flood control program and an item of $550,000 for extension of the detached breakwater at Los Angeles and Long Beach harbors were among the largest in the recommended schedule.

Included in the report to congress was $10,000 for maintenance of Redwood creek, California, for 1935.

At San Francisco harbor, the engineers said the general project was 59 per cent complete and the work remaining included removal of Alcatraz and Point Knox shoals, the removal of Raccoon shoal and a portion of Islais creek shoal. The proposed work there included $45,000 for dredging Presidio shoal between next March and June. An allotment of $275,000 from public works will be used in deepening the bar channel to 50 feet and removing Black Point, Raccoon, Alcatraz and Point Knox shoals and in removing the wreck of the A. H. Lunsman from Black Point shoal. The engineer said an additional $110,000 was needed during the fiscal year of 1935 for maintenance dredging on the bar channel and shoals.

"This work," they said, "will be necessary to insure adequate depths for commerce."

Although no work was done at Redwood creek, the engineers pointed out they recommended a modified project for this bay, 20 miles south of San Francisco, calling for a 27-foot channel, 200 feet wide. From San Francisco to the junction of Redwood creek, and West Point slough, with a turning basin of 1,800 feet by 700 feet and 27 feet deep, all at an estimated cost of $188,000 and $10,000 a year maintenance. No operations, they said were contemplated during the 1934 fiscal year, but $10,000 could be used in maintenance.

City Cooperates In Round-Up of Transient 'Army'

Redwood City will co-operate in the federal government's plan to "round up" transient, unemployed men and women, give them food and shelter and help them to find work.

Mayor William J. Dusel, back from a conference with H. A. R. Carleton, California transient director, emergency relief administration, reports that non-residents are being notified that, beginning today, the railroads will impose rigid restrictions relative to free transportation. This is intended to discourage transients from "riding the rods."

An effort is being made, also, to discourage hitch-hiking.

Registration offices in this vicinity for transients are at 595 West San Fernando street, San Jose, or at 340 Ninth street, in San Francisco.

JACK GREEN'S SENTENCE IS COMMUTED TO LIFE

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 4 (UP)—Governor Rolph today commuted to life imprisonment without right of parole the sentence of Jack D. Green, 29, of San Mateo, who was scheduled to be hanged at San Quentin Friday for the slaying of Police Lieutenant Hugh Crowley, Los Angeles.

Green's life has been extended by eight reprieves which Rolph granted to give legal advisors sufficient time to study the case and submit recommendations.

The prisoner was to have been moved to a death cell last night but Rolph ordered that action be postponed until announcement of his formal decision today.

As a result of this ruling, only succeeding governors may have the power to grant Green clemency in the form of a pardon. It will not be possible, legal advisors said, for Green himself to apply for a parole.

J. M. Regan, 30, Green's companion in the theatre robbery during which Crowley was killed, was hanged several months ago. Although granting Regan reprieves, Rolph refused to intercede finally in his case because evidence at trial indicated it was Regan who fired the fatal shot at Crowley.

LAW LIBRARY TRUSTEES SEEK LARGER QUARTERS

Declaring the new quarters assigned to it to be unsatisfactory for the purpose, the board of trustees of the San Mateo County Law Library Tuesday requested the supervisors to utilize the offices of Miss Pansy Jewett Abbott, county school head, instead.

The trustees met here Tuesday and the resolution of protest against the present quarters was introduced by Superor Judge Maxwell McNutt and was seconded by Attorney John W. Coleberd, South San Francisco.

The library was recently moved from its own quarters to the former waiting room in the district attorney's office.

It is suggested that the present law quarters be made into a permanent meeting place for the supervisors, as their old meeting place is now utilized by Department No. 2 of the superior court.

Miss Abbott's new offices would be outside the building, if the plan succeeds.

Airport Work Approved for CWA Project

Mills Field Will Be Improved at Cost Of $958,021

Improvement of Mills Field airport at San Bruno by way of land reclamation and enlargement of the runways at a total cost of $958,021 was under approval of the board of San Mateo County Supervisors Tuesday. The entire cost will come from the civil works administration funds except $22,500 to be supplied by the City and County of San Francisco.

The project was one of nine approved by the San Mateo county board of the CWA, and submitted to the supervisors for acceptance. They were presented by Sam D. Merk, director of unemployment relief, and Robert J. Koshland, chairman of the projects board.

The total projects will cost $992,124.19. Labor will claim $727,024.60 of this amount; materials will take $238,792 and "other costs" will require $26,307.59.

Unskilled labor will claim 821,826 hours of time, and skilled labor and professional services will use up 167,260 hours.

The approval of these projects, plus two other series costing over $500,000, brings the contemplated CWA program in San Mateo county to approximately $1,500,000.

To Paint Hospital

Repainting of the United States Veterans' Facility at North Palo Alto, all of which will be interior work with one exception, is provided for in the allotment of $7,992 for labor and $5,100 for materials, or a total cost of $13,092.

This project will give 7,920 hours of employment of painters. It was submitted by Dr. P. G. Lasche of the hospital.

Other Projects

The remaining $21,011 of the CWA funds will go toward smaller projects about the county.

Redwood City will secure additional funds for creating small municipal parks and for a comfort station; the Emerald Lake water extensions will be benefited; Atherton will secure funds for rebuilding three bridges on Walsh road, and Brisbane, San Mateo and Burlingame will divide the balance of funds.

Merk informed the board that the CWA would not assume the liability for workmen's compensation insurance, and the county agreed to bear this expense so that all workers will be protected.

$300,000 Will Be Expended On New Plant

Kynes Succeed Over Protest; to Open October 1

The California State Horse Racing Commission today granted a permit for a second racetrack in San Mateo county, over the opposition of a Burlingame-San Mateo group, which included Dr. C. V. Thompson, chairman of the board of supervisors, and Supervisor Albert Witt, Colma.

The Associated Press reported that the verdict of the board was unanimous in favor of the permit, with William P. Roth, Woodside member, siding with the other commissioners, John A. McNaughton and Carleton Burke.

Granting of the permit gives Tanforan a rival on the peninsula, and disregards the request of the county board that no further racing plants be allowed.

Peter B. Kyne, noted author, and William T. Kyne, prominent western turfman, who are not related, will be associated in the new track, which will be operated under the name of "Bay Meadows" by the California Jockey Club. The track will be located at Beresford.

Among the directors are David J. Davis, well-known Australian turfman, whose horses included 'Phar Lap," which met death by poisoning at Atherton a year ago. Davis is the owner of the new Montgomery Ward & Company building on Broadway, which is just completed.

The Associated Press reported that between $250,000 and $300,000 will be invested in the new enterprise, which will utilize a 120-acre airport site at Beresford.

William Kyne, who will be general manager of the new track, announces that a 50-day fall meeting will be held and that work will be speeded so track will be ready by Oct 1. Work will begin by Febr 1.

Bay Meadow ill alternate racing schedules th Tanforan so that they will t conflict.

No action w taken by the racing board o he application of the Los An s Turf Club for a permit fo he southern city. The applicat was filed by Dr. Charles Stru nd Gwynn Wilson. The Turf C , the Associated Press report represents a consolidation of e interests of Dr. Strub and I Roach, film producer and L Angeles sportsman.

Competition In Calaveras Water Plans

Santa Clara County, Alameda Have Eye On Acquisition

Peninsula cities face not one but at least two competitors in the efforts to buy the Calaveras reserroir of the San Francisco water system, it was indicated today. The system includes the watershed, dams, Upper Alameda creek water rights and the pipe line soon to be under construction.

Areas seeking Calaveras water are the San Mateo peninsula communities, the irrigation districts on the west side of Santa Clara county as well as the city of San Jose, and the Alameda County Water District, comprising towns and farming areas in the southern end of that county.

Water department officials point out there is doubt as to the legal right of San Francisco to sell the Calaveras watershed and reservoir. The Raker act provides Hetch Hetchy water shall not be available to the city until its water consumption shall have reached the peak of all available resources, such as the old Spring Valley system and such other water sources as may be acquired after passage of the act.

Calaveras Included

Calaveras reservoir was constructed after approval of the Raker act and comes within the provisions of that measure.

The peninsula communities started negotiations for Calaveras after the public utilities commission declined to give them a preferential rate on water from the Hetch Hetchy system. The refusal was based upon the grounds that San Francisco consumer taxpayers were paying the capital cost of Hetch Hetchy and any reducation in water rates should be applicable to them first.

Both the San Mateo communities and the Santa Clara district would have to construct a pipe line from Calaveras, at a cost estimated at $12,000,000, not taking into consideration reservoirs, distributing systems and pumping plants.

If San Mateo county towns should acquire Calaveras, they could build a pipe line across the bay at a cost of from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000, according to engineers, but the added cost of reservoirs and distributing systems would bring the cost of a water supply for the peninsula, extending from San Bruno and Daly City to Palo Alto, to more than $15,000,000.

The Alameda County Water District would oppose the sale of Calaveras watershed. They need the water even more than the other two districts, their engineers declare, and as the water naturally flows through the district, they believe they have the first legal right to it. The Alameda district could make use of the supply without the large expenditure required of the other two districts.

10 Additional Officers Due On Peninsula

Success in reducing the number of accidents by augmenting the San Mateo county traffic patrol today won 10 additional patrolmen for the peninsula for an indefinite period.

Chief E. Raymond Cato of the California Highway Patrol today notified Capt. Paul Perussina of the county squad of the increase.

The additional patrolmen will be stationed on the Bayshore, El Camino Real and Skyline boulevards and will make up five patrol cars of two officers each. Special attention will be paid to the enforcement of the 45-mile speed limit, Perussina said.

Cato informed Captain Perussina that the men will be available each week-end only.

Needs Explaining

Governor Rolph thinks it peculiar that a judge should have granted probation to a woman who stole $27,000 and sentenced a man who stole $1 in nickels out of a pay telephone.

Millions share a similar perplexity, and if the governor can explain things of that sort satisfactorily he will take rank in future with Solomon, Aristotle and the Seven Wise Women of Thebes.

Take Up the Cue

Roger Babson, who was the first to predict the downfall of business in 1929, is predicting a steady improvement in conditions for the current year, even going so far as to give the percentage of gain that may well be anticipated. When men of the character of Babson unhesitatingly make statements of this sort they are bound to have ample foundation, for no economist of today has a reputation for a more thorough insight into affairs than does this same Babson. It is now up to business in general to take the cue and proceed to do what is most necessary in any particular line to assure a continuous upward movement.

William Gary, proprietor of the Pink House, roadside cafe situated on El Camino Real south of Redwood City, was slugged unconscious and robbed by a highwayman at 11 a. m. Sunday.

Gary looked up startled, and as he did so partly turned his head. The thug then struck him with his fist or with a blunt instrument. Gary was knocked unconscious.

When he came to, he found the cash register had been rifled of $48.

The highwayman was described as about 35 to 40 years of age.

Deputy Sheriff Belton Rhodes was notified and Deputy Sheriff John T. Simpkin investigated.

COLD WAVE FELT

Zero Weather Continues in U. S. On Two Fronts

Wintry cold waves covered two areas of the United States Tuesday as Southern California toiled to rehabilitate a section stricken by one of the worst rainstorms of its history.

The northern half of the eastern seaboard shivered as frigid winds from the north brought near zero temperatures to New York state and New England. Upstate New York had temperatures ranging from zero to 10 above.

Rising Business Trends Shown in Survey for Coast

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 2 (AP)—Confirming reports of rising business from many quarters, the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco reported today the bank's studies of Pacific slope activities showed a gain in the aggregate for November. The rise followed a moderate two months' recession.

"Both industry and trade were more active than a year earlier," the reports said. There were seasonal declines however in industry and agriculture. Though wholesale prices of farm products fluctuated considerably they "showed little net change between the first of November and the middle of December."

Electric power production held up better than usual. Output of lumber mills likewise slackened less than normal and cement production increased sharply.

Further gains were reported in flour milling and demand deposits, checking accounts in banks.

Seasonal declines of less than ordinary proportions were recorded in merchandise and registration of new sales of automobiles.

Airport, once mere landing field, now leads list

SAN BRUNO, Jan. 1.—What was little more than a landing field a year or so back is now among the leading airports of the Pacific Coast, it was shown by records today.

Mills Field, San Francisco's airport at San Bruno, today is the terminus of every transport line operating in California.

Pet Lion Takes Nip At Coast Rancher

MOSS BEACH, Jan. 2.—W. H. Glosskurth, rancher, of Moss Beach, thinks, as he nurses several sore spots on his body today, that pet lions are all right in their place but that a public eating house is not one of them.

Witnesses report that the lion was brought into the cafe on a leash by a stranger and made a dive for Glosskurth. The stranger and the lion took a hurried departure, and Glosskurth looked up Dr. R. D. Borley of Half Moon Bay and was given first aid treatment. The wounds are not serious, Dr. Borley reported.

Gilmore Gasoline Aided In Setting New Speed Marks

The year 1933 resulted in the wholesale slaughter of speed records by automobiles, airplanes, motorcycles and motor boats using Gilmore Gasoline and Lion Head motor oil.

"Official American Automobile Association circles credit Gilmore with 42 speed marks for class C non-stock cars using Pacific coast gasoline. Also all records for one-mile circular dirt tracks from one mile to 100 miles," says Earl B. Gilmore, president of the Gilmore Oil Company. The one-mile mark is 106.23 miles per hour, made by "Al" Gordon in the Gilmore Special at Oakland. On the Legion Ascot Speedway every record from one to 150 laps is held by Gilmore gasoline.

"Col. Roscoe Turner broke the east-to-west airplane record from New York to Los Angeles using Gilmore Lion Head Motor Oil," Gilmore cites.

"On the motorcycle short tracks," he says, "Wilbur Lamorcaux shattered records and won the American championship using Gilmore and Ed Gerlick and Al Blohm in their speed-boats broke a flock of world class marks and won the national championship using Gilmore gasoline."

Woman Wins Beer Garden Court Case

Canfield Matter Is Up To Calif. Board, Swart Says

The effort of Mrs. Helen E. Canfield, Menlo Oaks widow, to maintain a beer garden in that restricted tract, was won Tuesday in the court of Superior Judge Franklin Swart.

She had named the supervisors defendants in a writ of review action filed when the board recently rejected her application for a beer license.

The judge ruled that Mrs. Canfield's soft drink permit is subject to renewal, and said "the board has neither the power to grant nor to deny beer licenses."

Protests were filed by property owners against the beer gardens.

This power now rests with the state board of equalization.

Mrs. Canfield was represented by D. E. Sullivan and H. D. Durst, Redwood City attorneys.

Body of Man May Be San Bruno War Vet

Police Chief William Maher of San Bruno today was investigating the possibility that the body of a man reported found off the San Mateo bridge on the Alameda side late yesterday might be that of a missing San Bruno Canadian World War veteran.

Harry M. Wallace, 45, the missing man, left a note when he left home December 30 hinting at suicide. He had been living with Mr. and Mrs. James Ray, 876 Sixth avenue, San Bruno, where he had boarded for the past year. He came from Washington.

On his departure, the Rays found the following note:

"Dear Jim: Maybe I won't be back. If so I want to thank you for all the kindnesses shown me. I am sorry that things turned out as they have and that I have not proved worthy of your generosity. Sincerely, Harry M. Wallace."

The Rays heard a radio broadcast of the finding of the body, and asked Chief Maher to investigate the chance that it might be their missing boarder.

Judge Urges Compromise On Food Bill

Supplies For County Jail Held Suited To St. Francis

Asserting that much of the foodstuffs delivered to the county jail would be more appropriate for serving at leading hotels, Superior Judge Franklin Swart today advised the Peninsula Stores Ltd. and Sheriff James J. McGrath to compromise the former's claim for $1180.

Judge Swart viewed the whole proceedings as "a comedy of errors."

He alleged the seller "loaded up the prisoners with merchandise more appropriate for the St. Francis than the county jail," and that the sheriff permitted the prisoners who did the buying "to run at large on the streets."

The practice at the jail, he inferred, was to send trusties down to the stores to do the buying.

Listed among items sent to the jail were picnic hams, rabbits, liver, grapefruit, T-bone steaks, pickled onions, sardines, cookies, clams, asparagus tips and sirloin roasts, it is disclosed.

When Purchasing Agent Ernest Werder refused to approve the bill, the stores sued Sheriff McGrath. Judge Swart says the county should have been made a party to the action as it has benefitted by "some of the merchandise."

"Each of the parties show considerable consideration toward a settlement," Judge Swart said. "One for selling this quality and quantity of merchandise to a prisoner, and the other for having the prisoner at large."

Judge Swart gave the litigants until January 8 to compromise the amount demanded by the stores.

". . . in sickness and health . . . for better, for worse, till death do us part . . ."

The solemn words fell into the stained glass hush of the church on a warm September afternoon. Mrs. Pettingill, who had known Gypsy Morell since childhood, sniffed and wiped her eyes quite openly. Mrs. Pettingill always cried at weddings. There was something . . . she didn't know . . . sad about them. Even when the bride was young and slim and lovely and pliant, as was Gypsy, who lived up to her name, from her crown of alive, curling brown hair to the soles of her dancing feet.

It was over now. Gypsy and Tom Weaver, the bridegroom, tall and fair-haired and grave, were turning away from the altar. The little church was filled to overflowing. Everybody craned necks to smile at the pair. Gypsy's dress, Mrs. Pettingill said to herself, mournfully, was "real sweet." No one would suspect she had made it herself, from a Paris pattern. It was demure, high-necked and full-skirted. She could wear it, later, as a dinner dress . . . trust Gypsy to think of that. Her veil was of tulle, fine and soft and billowy, but the cap that crowned it was of old, rare lace. Gypsy's great-grandmother, a delicate, aristocratic French girl who had married a sea-going Morell in 1851, had brought it with her to the little New Jersey town.

Tom Weaver was real good-looking, reflected Mrs. Pettingill, solemnly, putting her handkerchief away and preparing to follow the newly married pair to the vestry, where they would see their friends. She had been invited to the church, of course, but only a few people beside "the immediate family" would go on to the Morell house, a big, shabby, rambling frame structure on Upper Dean street. Mrs. Morell was "poorly" and there would be no reception, as such. Tom and Gypsy would slip away, later, in the shining little two-seated car which was Gypsy's wedding present from her bridegroom. Dear knows why, Mrs. Pettingill muttered to herself. They were going to live in New York City, the young Weavers. It was expensive to keep a car there, ruinously so. What the good lady did not know (and she knew almost everything of interest that had happened in Blue Hills) was that Tom and Gypsy intended to leave the car at "Mother's," using it only for week-ends.

It was strange, but everybody seemed to say the same thing. "Congratulations! You looked just lovely . . . never saw a prettier bride." Gypsy stood, looking small and childlike, at Tom Weaver's side. Her smile was good to see. She was 22, gay, buoyant, gallant. Tom, some people said to each other, was a lucky fellow. Tom's people sniffed and said Gypsy was the lucky one.

Mrs. Pettingill pumped the bridegroom's hand and kissed Gypsy with the thoroughness she bestowed on everything she did.

"I hope you'll be as happy as Mr. Pettingill and I have always been," she said, sentimentally. She beamed at them from behind her strong glasses. She was always one for young folks, she told herself. They gave you hope . . . something to go on. It was a pity she and Henry never had children. Gypsy was almost like one of her own, though, living across the street, as she did. Why, from the time she was that high . . . Mrs. Pettingill measured the space halfway up the umbrella she carried . . . Gypsy had been in and out of her house as if it were her own.

She went on, smiling and sighing, nodding to the neighbors. Gypsy saw everyone, had a word for them all. The dressmaker who had made her mother's beige crepe. The children from the nursery school in Upper Dean street, where she had taught last year. All her mother's old friends. Then the young ones clustered around. Sue and the Blake twins, Margie and Tip and Jack Ferris and all the others. It was fun. Gypsy was enjoying her own wedding.

"All right, darling." Tom thought they ought to go now. The ice cream would be melting in the dishes up at her mother's house. How odd that she should think of home in those terms already — well, she was a wife, and she would have an establishment of her own very soon, her own chairs and tables and books and beds. It was a thrilling thought.

They ran through aisles of laughing people to the taxi which stood waiting. One of the station taxis. The driver was a ruddy-faced man who had known Gypsy since he had driven her to dancing school at the age of 10.

"Wish you luck," the man murmured, shamefacedly, slamming the door after them. Tip and Jack threw rice. The last Gypsy saw of them all was a sea of smiling faces. Then she was alone with Tom.

"Darling, darling!" He turned her hand about, so, and put a kiss into the upturned palm. Dear Tom, how serious he was about all this! Gypsy's face was bright with smiles, her eyes fairly danced.

"Wasn't it all beautiful? Didn't it go well?" she exulted, settling herself into the curve of his arm. "I suppose it would have been better, as you suggested, to slip away and be married quietly . . . just ourselves. But this was fun, wasn't it? The church . . . and all the old friends, and everything?"

Tom stopped all this chatter in the most sensible possible way, with a kiss. It was like Gypsy to rattle on in this excitable fashion. Privately, he thought that while the ceremony itself had been memorably beautiful, it was dreadful to have all those hordes of people gaping and sighing over one. Now they would have an hour . . . maybe two hours . . . of handshaking and embracing, before he and his wife (how strange the word sounded!) could slip away quietly together.

The porch of the gabled brown house had been made brave with flowers . . . hydrangeas in tubs, some red roses. But nothing, Gypsy thought, with a quick sigh and frown for the intrusion of this thought on the perfection of the afternoon, nothing could hide the shabbiness of the old basket chairs, nor disguise the fact that paint was peeling from pillar and ceiling. Father had wanted to have the house painted for the wedding —darling Father! But of course, he hadn't been able to manage it. It was just one of those day-dreams in which the happy-go-lucky Morells occasionally indulged themselves. "Some Day We'll Have the House Painted" was the name of that particular dream.

As if it mattered, cried Gypsy to herself, rushing up the steps . . . as if anything mattered o this day of days, her wedding day!

Clytie, the colored woman who had cooked and scrubbed and nursed the Morells for some 20-odd years, ever since Gypsy's adorable and turbulent babyhood, appeared in the doorway. Clytie had a new pale green uniform, but her apron straps were crooked and her cap awry, as usual. Not even Gypsy's wedding day could make Clytie completely tidy. She rolled her eyes at them both in welcome as she swung the screen door wide.

"Bes' wishes, Mis' Gypsy," she cried sonorously. "Congratulations, Mist' Weaver."

In three minutes the old house was buzzing with noise and excitement. Gypsy, her veil tossed back, stood to cut the huge cake, of Clytie's baking, at a dining room table heavy with embroidery and yellowed lace. Mrs. Morell, a slender, melancholy lady in her early 50's, with the resigned expression of the chronic invalid, watched her only daughter anxiously. Gypsy was "so flighty," all the relatives said. Maybe marriage would "settle her," although in 1932 marriage wasn't any too likely to achieve such results. And she was young to marry—22. Mrs. Morell herself had been 28 at the time of her own marriage, and 30 at the time of Gypsy's birth. Later —eight years later—had come the twins, Bertram and Beatrice. Mrs. Morell said to herself she'd never been really well since. But Gypsy —well, marriage would be different for her. Girls nowadays took it in their stride. Gypsy—fancy that! —was going to keep her job. She taught in a settlement house over in New York City. Her mother wondered gloomily just how long that state of affairs would last. Gypsy was such a child about everything, such an optimist. She thought it would be a lark to manage home, husband and job as well.

"A lot she knows," murmured Mrs. Morell darkly to herself.

The slices, dark and rich, fell away under her daughter's knife.

"Mummy! The first for Mummy!" Mrs. Morell came alive, smiling and sighing. Why, she was just a baby. She thought life was all roses and sunshine . . .

The shadows lengthened outside. Upstairs, in the big corner bedroom, Gypsy was folding her wedding dress into its tissue and slipping into the beige tweeds which were her traveling costume.

"My dear, it's simply stunning!" This was Sue Canavan, her bridesmaid. Sue, still in the delphinium blue chiffon which brought out the color of her own long-lashed eyes.

Sue after a long hunt found her gloves for her, her hat, her printed linen handkerchief. Beatrice, the 14-year-old twin, all arms and legs and tawny hair, worn in a Janet Gaynor bob, sat cross-legged on the bed.

"Bee, you're not a scrap of help," Sue flung at her in exasperation. "You're like a Chinese idol, sitting there and staring."

Beatrice rolled over on the bed and regarded the ceiling with bored eyes.

"When you've been around this place as long as I have," she said, between yawns, "you'll find nothing is ever in its proper place. Gypsy's kennel has always been a mess . . ." She grinned ingratiatingly at her sister.

"Wait till I get at it, day after tomorrow," she exulted. "I'm going to paint the woodwork and Tip is going to put up shelves for my books . . . I'll get new curtains, green theatrical gauze, I think."

"Ghoul!" Gypsy, touching her mouth quite unnecessarily with lipstick, turned from the mirror. "She can't wait to get me cut, before she moves in!"

Just the same, when the time came to go, the sisters clung to each other. The younger gulped back a sob hardily, essaying an air of casualness which didn't quite come off.

"Honest, Gyp, we'll miss you. I don't know how Mums . . ." She winked away a bright drop or two and said briskly: "Well, for crying out loud, if this isn't a fine way to speed the happy pair! I'll be mumbling in my beard, first thing you know."

"Bee, Bee, such dreadful slang," mourned Mrs. Morell, primly.

"So out of date, too," crowed Sue, glad of anything to break the tension of the moment.

There were more embraces, more handshakings, a few tears, and then the young Weavers got into the bright and shining little car which Tip Barrington, Tom's best friend, had tooled around from the garage.

"So long . . . Toodle-oo . . . we'll be seein' you. Don't forget to send a postcard. Goodby, darling . . ."

Harvey Morell, long-legged, dark-haired, with quizzical wrinkles at the corners of his fine eyes, took his wife's arm.

"Well, Louise, that's over. Makes a fellow feel a bit long in the tooth, eh?"

Mrs. Morell was frankly wiping her eyes. Her daughter was gone . . . of course, she still had Bert and Bee, but the house wouldn't be the same without Gypsy. Gypsy, flying in and out, slamming doors, running the bath water. Gypsy appearing in the doorway with an armful of blue iris. "Look what I picked up for you at the ferry tonight, Mums. Only a quarter . . ."

No, it would be different. Quite.

There was a striped red and white canopy outside St. Bartholomew's. The red carpet at the edge of the sidewalk was already dusty from the scuffling of many feet. Indoors an organ pealed sonorously. Shabby old women, who always seem to spring up like mushrooms after rain at a big city wedding, brooded murkily around the doorway, waiting for the big moment. More than once a frock-coated young man with sleek hair came to stare impatiently through the aperture.

"The bride's late . . . she's late." The murmur ran from lip to lip. The old ladies sniffled and groaned, shifting from one preposterously shod foot to the other. Maybe she'd be real late. Maybe she wouldn't come at all, their sniffs said. Sometimes that happened . . . then it was real exciting . . . then a piece got into the papers about it . . . Still and all, they hoped she would come. Without her, there would be no real drama.

Shining car after shining car slid up and deposited its well-dressed and scented wedding guests. Ladies in beige, in blue, in black, with expensive furs slung over their modish shoulders, although the day was warm. Gentlemen in the uniform of the day, the topper, the striped trousers, the perfectly cut tail coat, the shining shoes. The old women loved it all. They wouldn't miss it for anything.

At long last, the awaited thrill came. The bride! All brides should be lovely, and Lila Hotaling lived up to the tradition. Gardenia-fair her skin, buttercup-yellow her shining hair, a feather or two of which escaped from the rare point lace which framed her face. Her frock, of medieval cut, was of some soft, dull stuff. She wore a string of pearls and you knew they were real. She carried calla lilies.

Lovely, lovely bride!

How the music pealed as she came, with cool dignity, into the vestry! The tall man with her—her uncle, it was whispered, a diplomat of parts, who had crossed the sea to "give her away" in the quaint old style, marveled at her calm. The bridesmaids ahead—six of them—in graded nasturtium tints, were more nervous than she. One of them, a willowy redhead, trembled all over with every step she took. It must be her first wedding, thought Lila's uncle, gravely.

Necks were craned, there was a polite rustle all over the church. Scent of lilies, of hothouse roses, of La Vierge Folle, delicate and insinuating; sound of music, of traffic outside in Park avenue, of New York Central trains rumbling somewhere in the bowels of the earth.

"Here comes the . . . " The old women outside could hear the music. They were humming to themselves. They'd wait till she came out again. It wasn't every day you saw such a swell wedding. Gave you something to think about.

Derek Bliss, rather like a fawn in morning clothes, a well-tailored fawn with stormy dark brows and eyes flashing amber lightnings, stood waiting for his bride. Derek, who was everything that was eminently correct, from his college to his clubs, but who hadn't as much money as the Hotaling clan thought Lila might expect. Not that Lila's people were rich—far from it—but they had a tradition of money in their house. All the Hotaling women had expensive tastes and indulged them. Lila's father had died three years ago, exhausted from the strain.

Gypsy had been sorry she couldn't go to Lila's wedding. They had met, down on the Cape, every summer, in childhood. Gypsy's Morell grandmother and Lila's had been friends. To the rambling old houses on the bleached shore they had gone, summer after summer. Of course, their lives, back home, had run along entirely different lines. Gypsy's lawyer father made just enough money to feed, clothe and house his brood.

Nothing was left for expensive private schools, in Gypsy's childhood, while Lila had of course experienced what is known as "the best" in that quarter. Lila had even had a year in Paris, when she was 19, while Gypsy's first college year had been cut short by Mother's operation. Gypsy had come home, just a trifle subdued, to keep house and manage Clytie, somewhat sketchily, and see that the twins washed behind the ears. While Lila had come out in state, had been presented at court in a train and three feathers, had learned the language of the smart world.

It was during Gypsy's year at the settlement house (she had managed a course in kindergartening in the year following her mother's convalescence) that the two girls had renewed their acquaintanceship. Lila, beautiful in furs had rushed into the shabby brick establishment one November afternoon.

"My dear, I couldn't get away earlier. Am I late?" The other Junior Leaguers gabbled frantically. Lila had looked up to see the young secretary, neat and plain in her dark blue frock, staring at her.

"My dear, isn't it . . . it's never Gypsy Morell!"

They had seen each other rather often, as often as Lila's heavy calendar of engagements would permit, that winter. And now Lila was being married on the same day as Gypsy. My dear, wasn't that just the most romantic thing?

Lila wasn't thinking of Gypsy at the moment, however. She was occupied with herself, her train, her bouquet. Derek looked rather sweet, didn't he? He was rather a lad—a bit of a lamb, that boy. Yes it was a pity he hadn't more money, but she, Lila, would soon see to it that he got more of it. That was a wife's job.

Her expression was soulful, but she was thinking of things mundane. Had Uncle Win remembered to order the champagne? Had Derek really wangled the biggest suite on the Empiric? She wanted it. She meant to travel in state. The other two times she had crossed, with Aunt Phoebe, she had had a muggy little cabin on C deck. No more of that, thank you.

". . . I, Lila, take thee, Derek . . ."

It was funny, but weddings were all exactly alike. She'd been a bridesmaid twice last season. You got bored with the ritual. Isn't it a pity there wasn't more kick to it? How solemn the clergyman sounded!

The organist crashed into the recessional now. She faced about triumphantly. She knew she looked her best. That photographer had kept her standing for ages, though the idiot. She was just a wee bit tired. She could do with a cocktail this moment.

Down the aisle they went. Lila kept her eyes down. She didn't believe in this beaming-bride stuff. Demureness was more her style, anyhow.

No lingering outside here, as at Gypsy's wedding. Lila and Derek ran the gauntlet of old ladies and disappeared in the maw of a shining long-limbed car. The reception was to be at Sherry's. Lobster thermidor. Curved glasses brimming with golden bubbles. High, nervous laughter. An orchestra thrumming above it all.

"Come along, sweets, let's get out of this!" That was Derek, frowning, looking at his watch. "We're riding a bit close to the wind." Lila's laughter rose higher and higher. They must come—they must all come to see them off.

She vanished, reappearing in a dark blue costume which effectively showed off her slender, rounded figure. She had a knot of green orchids for her silver fox. Her makeup was a triumph. She looked flawlessly young, sophisticated, amused.

The suite was packed to the brim with roses, with telegrams, exotic fruit in tall baskets. Derek gloomed around, hands in pockets, waiting for the signal which would call the merry-makers ashore.

"Why not come along? Why not all of you . . ." Lila was forgetting the occasion was her honeymoon. She wanted to make it a wholesale cruise.

At last they drifted away and the two were left to hang over the ship's edge alone.

"Happy, dearest?"

Her voice was decidedly pettish. Nerves crept into it, now the excitement had died down and the audience had disappeared.

"I'm a wreck. Honestly. What a day!"

Her face was a white blur in the early dusk. He caught her hand.

"We're going to make a go of it, aren't we, sweets? Not like some of these others." If you listened closely, you might have caught a note of anxiety in his voice. It was as if he pleaded for reassurance.

"What? Oh, yes, of course?" Lila hardly listened. She had gone back into the brightly lighted room now, with its lamps and flowers and drawn silk curtains. A stewardess rustled past her.

"Beg pardon, madam!" There were more telegrams, more roses, more boxes. Derek was being tiresome, Lila decided, with all his solemn talk. She didn't see any sense to it.

The engines, far below, churned into life; a whistle brayed. Silently the big boat moved away from the pier. Life was beginning for Lila and Derek.

The ferry carrying Gypsy and Tom, in the shining little car, slipped through the warm September night.

"Look, Tom!" Their car had been the first one on the boat, so they had a splendid view of the harbor. "Look, that must be—yes, it is the Empiric. Lila's boat."

The majestic ship, a fairy cargo of twinkling lights, moved on its way. The ferry rocked a little in the wash. Tom said, lightly: "You ought to be going to London and Paris, too, instead of to a little shack on Long Island."

"Why, you great big silly!" She widened her eyes at him. "As if I didn't love Wading Hallow! As if I'd give up our two weeks there for London or Paris."

"It's crude," Tom reminded her. "It's just dunes and scrub oak and water . . ."

Gypsy interrupted him to say ecstatically: ". . . and that delicious salty smell, and sunsets on the beach, and fish frys and lying for hours in the sun and being lazy . . . why, I love it, and you know it."

The young husband grinned at her. He was very likable when that smile crinkled up his sun-browned face with its crown of fair, curling hair.

"So you're satisfied, woman, are you!"

"Your darn shouting I am." It was just as well Mrs. Morell wasn't around, to hear her daughter's choice of words.

The ferry bumped into the slip and Tom drove expertly off into the downtown streets of the city. They would cross another bridge and find one of the main arteries which led down Long Island, and they would stop when they were tired, some hours later, at a pleasant little inn they knew, half way down, for dinner. They planned to reach the beach house before midnight. There everything had been put in readiness for them by Tom's elder sister, Rosina, who had a summer place several miles away. The Wading Hollow place, cabin and some acre or so of ground, was young Mr. Weaver's sole heritage. He had come into the property some years before on the death of a maiden aunt. Gypsy had spent several weeks there, the season before, under Rosina's chaperonage, and had fallen in love with the place.

"Rose said she'd put up new curtains," Tom said, cheerfully. "You won't know the shack, it's so dressed up for you."

"If you've changed one stick or stone of it," Gypsy warned him impressively, "I'll never speak to you again. It was perfect as it was."

Tom drove, one-handed fashion. His free arm held his small wife in its curve. They left houses behind, left the winkling lights of villages, after their simple meal they smelled the sweet scent of pine and salt water, of hay drying in the fields.

"Mmmmm . . ." That was Gyp. "Don't you love it?"

"We're almost there."

They turned into the dirt road and bumped over it gallantly. The moon made a track on the waters just ahead.

"Home, Mrs. Weaver, ma'am."

The little house waited for them, dark and silent and welcoming.

Tom carried her over the threshold.

Law Library Change Is Up To Manager

Other Matters Given Consideration By Supervisors

The plan to use the offices of Miss Pansy Jewett Abbott, county superintendent of schools, as the new quarters of the county law library, was referred Tuesday by the supervisors to County Manager Walter Kellogg.

Miss Abbott informed the board that it was necessary for her to be in the courthouse as she made frequent contacts during the day with the auditor's office. If outside the courthouse, Miss Abbott said, her office would be closed many times during the day while her assistant runs errands to the courthouse.

The board gave approval to a claim for $1,513 for lumber supplied by the Bloomquist mill at Pescadero for a bridge over Pescadero creek.

Belmont volunteer firemen suggested the appointment of John G. Smith to fill a vacancy on the fire board. The matter was put over for one week.

Manager Kellogg was asked by Supervisor Albert Witt, Colma, to make a recommendation on the appointment of a fire commissioner for the Bayshore district.

Supervisor Witt, protesting the planning commission's recommendation on the School street, Colma, project, said that this was not a political pledge to his district but a definite part of his program. He said he would personally appear before the civil works administration board to win full approval of the project. The planning commission recommended only a section of the highway.

Application of Harry Lorentzen to rezone a lot in North Palo Alto was referred to the planning commission.

Red Cross Seeks Clothes, Blankets For Needy People

A strong appeal for old clothes and bedding, or materials to make them, was voiced today by officials of the local Red Cross chapter.

The need for clothing is acute in numerous needy homes of the district. Blankets are also wanted.

Donations of these things serve a double purpose, for unemployed women are hired to repair the clothing and do other sewing which may be necessary. In exchange for their services they receive food orders.

Anyone having materials to offer should telephone Mrs. George

SCHELLING TO END CONCERT SERIES

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 3.—Ernest Schelling will make his last appearance here as guest conductor in the series of concerts for young people being given by the San Francisco Symphony in a specially selected program Thursday afternoon in the War Memorial Opera House.

Schelling, famous conductor of children's concerts for the New York Philharmonic, will offer an unusual attraction for this last of the series. He will open with the allegro movement from Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Mendelssohn's Scherzo from "The Midsummer Night's Dream," will follow.

The Cydalise "School for Fawns" and excerpts from "Scheherazade" by Rimsky-Korakow, will bring the program down to the community singing event, "America, the Beautiful." The program will close with Ravel's popular "Bolero."

Once more Schelling will illustrate his program with his extensive library of slides and with his explanatory lecture.
